.....SINCE 1875

On December 14, 1875, with the granting of their charter as a State Bank, the Peoples Bank came into existence. On the original Board of Directors appeared names still familiar to those who live in this area, Cronck, Marchant, Harman, Letterman, Hanckel, Coles, Pace, Michie, Darrett, Farish, Blakey, Jones, and Goodyear. The President's (Mr. C. H. Harman) salary was set at $250 a year. Mr. W. W. Flannagan, the first Cashier, received a salary of $1,000 a year and the Teller received $800. Business operations were carried on in one room of the Harman building, which the Bank rented for $150 a year. Books were kept by double-entry and set down in pencil each day. "The work of each day must be posted and examined before the Bank opens on the following day . . . . The account of every person . . . shall have the balance struck upon the ledger at least once in every three months, and on the customer's books providing they can be had for that purpose by the bookkeeper . . ."

During 1881, the Bank records mention business done with the Park National Bank of New York (now the Chase Manhattan Bank) which became our first correspondent Bank. July of the same year saw the beginning of semi-annual dividend payments. But perhaps the greatest achievement of that year occurred when the bank acquired a 20-year charter as a National Bank with $50,000 capital stock having a $100 par value.

In 1887, Mr. R. T. W. Duke was elected President of the Peoples National Bank and served until his resignation one and a half years later, when Mr. Benjamin R. Pace was elected to that office. Following the death of the latter in December, 1894, Judge John M. White was unanimously elected. Later on in 1895, negotiations began for the construction of new banking quarters on the corner lot of South side Main and 4th Streets, where Timberlakes Drugstore now stands—one block from where the Home Office is now located.

It is interesting to note that the Peoples Bank and the University of Virginia have had a close and pleasant relationship for many years. In 1896, in connection with a proposed bond issue of the University of Virginia, the Peoples National Bank and the Bank of Albemarle were designated and employed as the financial agents of the Rectors and Visitors of the University of Virginia to negotiate a bond issue to cover the loan for the restoration of the University, after the Rotunda burned in 1895.

The tempo of the times is reflected in another entry early in 1897 "Whereas the closing of this Bank on Saturdays at 12 o'clock causes a crowd to congregate around the present Teller's window, he not being able to wait on all the customers with ease and without being rushed, now therefore be it Resolved in order to facilitate the business of this Bank that on Saturdays there shall be created an additional officer, vix. a receiving teller, and that W. W. Waddell shall act as such, whose duty shall be to only receive the moneys of the depositors for that day and that the present teller shall be paying teller for that day."

The Bank steadily continued to grow and prosper. Upon the death of Judge White, George R. B. Michie was unanimously elected to the presidency. It was during his tenure that the Peoples Bank made some local history by establishing the first branch office in Charlottesville, located appropriately enough at the University. Branch Offices at Crozet and Louisa were acquired in 1933. In 1938, when Mr. Michie was elected Chairman of the Board, Mr. W. S. Hildreth who had served as Executive Vice President for a year and a half became President and held this office for almost twenty years. Under his leadership the bank flourished and in 1947 acquired the Elkton office and established the Preston Avenue Office in 1953. Meanwhile, in 1952 Charlottesville was introduced to Drive-in-Banking in back of the Home Office on Water Street. In 1957, upon Mr. Hildreth's election as Chairman of the Board, Mr. W. Wright Harrison became President and serves in that capacity today. During these past four and a half years, the Peoples Bank has established, through mergers, offices in Gordonsville, Orange, Stanardsville, Waynesboro and Dillwyn. The attractive office at Barracks Road was constructed (1958) and the University office was moved to handsome new quarters at Chancellor Street and University Avenue.

Throughout the years, the Peoples Bank has played an important part in the economic life and growth of Charlottesville and the surrounding area. Having offered "Progressive Banking Service to Central Virginia—since 1875," the Peoples Bank can reiterate with considerable gratification the phrases from a report written in 1880—"the condition of the bank entirely satisfactory; . . . in a healthy condition . . . steadily increased from the organization of the Bank"

It is a particularly happy occasion for me to extend to the people of Charlottesville my personal and official felicitations on the occasion of that city's 200th anniversary celebration.

Appropriately, this week-long event will open with religious observances in many of the churches which grace that city, reaffirming the abiding faith of this State and this nation in a Divine Providence.

In its setting of rolling Green hills, Charlottesville has always been one of the showplaces of Virginia. For a time during the Revolutionary War, it was Virginia's capital city.

Here Thomas Jefferson poured his genius into the concept, the architecture and the spirit of the University of Virginia, creating a center of learning respected throughout the world.

Mindful of my many distinguished predecessors in office who have been privileged to attend the University and to become a part of this lovely city, I extend my best wishes for a most successful undertaking.

CITY CREATED BY ACT OF ASSEMBLY

Charlottesville was deliberately created as the county seat of Albemarle County by an Act of the General Assembly of the Virginia Colony on December 23, 1762. George III was then the reigning king of Great Britain and her colonies, and the new town was appropriately named for his young queen, Charlotte Sophia of Mecklenberg-Strelitz. Albemarle County, which had been carved out of Goochland County in 1744, had been named for the Royal Governor-General of the colony at that time, William Anne Keppel, Second Earl of Albemarle.

When first established, Albemarle County lay on both sides of the James River, embracing the additional area now made up of Fluvanna, Buckingham, Nelson, Amherst and Appomattox Counties, and so it was almost inevitable that the first county court house should be built near the center of the area and close to the James River, the main artery of transportation and communication with the trade and population centers of the colony.

The Wm. Woods map of Dec. 17, 1818. Courtesy of Albemarle County Historical Society. This map was made by Col. William Woods, Dec. 17, 1818, after the addition of High Street (first called Maiden Lane) and new numbered lots on either side of it to the town area.

ALBEMARLE COUNTY ESTABLISHED 1745

On the 4th Thursday in February, 1745, on Mrs. Daniel Scott's plantation, near Scott's Ferry, (now Scottsville), the new county was "organized", that is, its governing officers were elected or appointed and took their oaths of office. Those present at the organization (Wood's History of Albemarle County, Page 8) were Joshua Fry, Peter Jefferson, Allen Howard, Dr. William Cabell, Joseph Thompson and Peter Ballou. All of these men, and additionally Charles Lynch, James Daniel and Edwin Hickman, became the first magistrates of the county. Fry was named Surveyor and also the Lieutenant of the County, in charge of the militia. Under him were Peter Jefferson as Lieutenant-Colonel, Allen Howard as Major, William Cabell, Joseph Thompson, Charles Lynch, Thomas Ballou, David Lewis, James Daniel, James Nevel, and James Martin as Captains. Joseph Thompson was the first Sheriff. William Randolph (of "Tuckahoe") was the first Clerk, and Edmund Gray the first King's Attorney. The first court house was constructed about a mile west of the village, on the farm then called "Belle Grove", more recently "Valmont", to be a replica of the Goochland Court House, 36 feet long and 26 feet wide.

NEW COUNTY COURT HOUSE

In 1761, Albemarle County lost all its area south of the James River to the newly created counties of Buckingham and Amherst. Since 1734, when Michael Woods and William Wallace led a group of Scotch-Irish and German settlers into western Albemarle from the Shenandoah Valley, there had been a gradual build-up of population in the Piedmont part of the county, along the Three Chopt Road and the trail blazed in 1716 by Governor Spotswood's "Knights of the Golden Horseshoe". Also, many of the larger early land grants were in the Southwest Mountains area, notably those to Peter Jefferson, Nicholas Meriwether (in all about 19,000 acres), Secretary John Carter, Col. Thomas Carr, William Randolph, Robert Lewis, etc. Therefore, the shift in 1761 of the court house to a hill in the valley west of the Secretary's Ford across the Rivanna was a natural development in the county government. The new site was on land patented by William Taylor in 1737, lying between the Nicholas Meriwether tract on the east and the David Lewis (1735) patent of 3,500 acres on the west. When the county purchased 1,000 acres of the Taylor tract in 1761, it was then owned and conveyed by Col. Richard Randolph, of Henrico County.

HOW CITY WAS LAID OUT

A rectangular area adjacent to the Court Square was laid off for the new town of Charlottesville and put in charge of Dr. Thomas Walker, of Castle Hill, as Trustee, for sale by lots.

So many towns have grown up from roadside villages. Washington, the nation's capital, and Charlottesville, on the contrary, were arbitrarily laid out in a regular pattern. According to Woods and Alexander (Early Charlottesville Recollections, edited by Mary Rawlings), the town, as laid out in 1762, was bounded on the north by Jefferson Street and on the south by South Street and was composed of 4 tiers of 7 squares each, 28 squares in all, each square containing 2 numbered  $\frac{1}{2}$  acre lots. Thus, the original town covered 28 acres and was divided into 56 numbered lots.

The first map (aside from a detail on Dan Smith's roadmap of about 1783) of the town now extant is one made by Col. William Woods, dated December 17, 1818. This map gives the names of the streets and locates the lots by number. Moreover, this map includes additional lots north of Jefferson Street and the opening of what is now High Street. High Street was first called Maiden Lane. Jefferson Street was very likely so named originally in honor of Peter Jefferson's many services to the county. Main Street was a part of the Three Chopt Road. The first public market in Charlottesville was in the center of Market Street. A study of the Woods map indicates that the original squares lay on the south side of Jefferson Street, on both sides of Market Street, on both sides of Main Street, on both sides of Water Street (named as such because of the springs emptying into it), and on the north side of South Street; and going from east to west, on both sides of Court (now 5th), Union (now 4th), School (now 3rd), Church (now 2nd), Green (now 1st), and Hill (now 2nd, west). Most of the early buildings were constructed on Jefferson, Market and Main Streets.

The public square containing the Court House and Jail was outside of the town area. Miss Rawlings' note on page 1 of Alexander's Recollections, says that at first the Court House tract "was not bordered by streets, it being intended to reproduce an English green, with houses facing directly upon it. This proving impracticable, the County later laid off from its grounds a street on each side of the building". The Woods map shows these streets as so laid out.

The county land outside of the public square and the original 56 town lots was subdivided irregularly in "out-lots" of varying size, and these were gradually purchased by homeowners and land speculators. The Woods map gives numbers, from 57 to 82 for the new group of lots on both sides of High Street. Most of those were also half-acre lots.

EARLY BUILDINGS

The town grew slowly. In the first year of sales, 1763, only 14 lots were sold to 7 purchasers, in the next year only 10. In 1779 it contained about a dozen houses, but by 1835, according to Miss Rawlings, "it consisted of about 200 handsome and comfortable dwellings, generally of brick, 4 houses of worship, 3 large hotels, 1 tavern, 2 book stores, 2 druggist stores, and about 20 mercantile establishments". James Alexander, mentioned above, came to Charlottesville as a printer and editor in December 1828. His recollections of the buildings and other establishments of Charlottesville of that period are the subject of his notes edited by Miss Rawlings. The framed map of early Charlottesville now standing in Court Square, a gift to the Charlottesville Bicentennial from the Albemarle County Historical Society and the Civic League of Charlottesville and Albemarle County, attempts to show the original lots north of Water Street and the buildings standing in 1828, on the authority principally of Alexander, Woods and Rawlings.

From the beginning of the town the Albemarle County Court House has been a central point of interest. Little is known of the first building established shortly after 1761. However, it and the present 1803 section served not only as the County Court House but also as the main meeting hall for the town. It was used interdenominationally for church services before the churches were built; elections were held there; public speeches were made there; and most important meetings were also there, including those of the University's first Board of Visitors, of which Thomas Jefferson was Rector and James Madison and James Monroe were members, and the Albemarle Agricultural Society (formed in 1817) of which James Madison was president. Jefferson as a lawyer and magistrate and Monroe as a magistrate performed professional duties there. Perhaps no other court house in this Country has had three of our Presidents intimately associated with it. That is why the only portraits in the present court room are those of Jefferson and Madison and Monroe. The Court House was rebuilt in 1803, was added to between 1859 and 1861, and a remodeling was done in 1938.

The Court Square in 1828 was the hub of the town. Attention has already been called to the uses to which the Court House was put. There were two thriving taverns, the Eagle Tavern (present site of the older part of the Monticello Hotel) and the Swan Tavern (present site of the Redland Club), operated by John Jouett, Sr.

The Bottled Gas Corp. of Virginia began operations in 1940. It has eight District Offices located at Richmond, Charlottesville, Fredericksburg, Suffolk, Colonial Heights, Brandy Station, Emporia and Crewe. These offices distribute bulk propane (Bottled Gas) to approximately twenty-five thousand domestic and industrial users in Eastern and Central Virginia. At first bottled gas was used only for cooking, water-heating and refrigeration. Through Bottled Gas Corp. of Virginia's research program they have developed many new uses such as flame cultivation, crop drying, tobacco curing, poultry brooding, home heating, motor fuel, metal treatment and tar-kettles.

The Charlottesville District office was opened in 1947, on Monticello Road and Moore's Creek. In 1957 they moved into their new offices located on East High Street. The Keswick Tank Farm is the largest tank farm in Eastern United States. Forty-five company owned tank cars continuously transport propane from Oklahoma to Bottled Gas Corp. of Virginia's eight bulk plants.

Frank T. Sutton, III manages the Charlottesville District and is Vice-President in charge of Districts. Rea Loving is Assistant-Manager and Felton Goodson is Service Superintendent.

There was a public library, post office, printing shop, liquor store, jewelry shop, auction rooms and outside auction blocks, tailor's shop, hatter's shops, two dry goods stores, other merchants' establishments, and several offices and residences. One of the residences, on Jefferson Street at its corner with Union, was the town house (about 1790) of a country doctor, Dr. George Gilmer, who commuted by horse and buggy between "Pen Park", his home in the country, and the town, but liked to have a place to stay when bad weather or other cause made the trip to the country inadvisable. This house, incidentally, stood until 1922.

Woods in his History of Albemarle County, pp. 380 and 383, listed by years the attorneys admitted to the Albemarle Bar, and the number in the early years would seem to indicate some importance to the local court. Possibly after 1820 some of the admissions were of law graduates of the University of Virginia who sought admission

An Historic Old Virginia Plantation becomes a Country Club

In the Thursday afternoon edition of the Charlottesville Daily Progress, dated May 16, 1929, there appeared on the front page: "Farmington Country Club Opened Doors with Brilliant Reception and Dance, Old Mansion Designed by Jefferson Becomes Modern Recreation Center with Every Convenience for Member and Guests."

It is probably the oldest house in America used as a club and one of the finest clubs in the South. It has a national membership.

The fair domain of Farmington first appears on public record as being part of a royal grant of 4,753 acres on both sides of Ivy Creek in Virginia given by George II of England by Letters Patent under date of March 15, 1744 to landowner Michael Holland of Hanover, Virginia.

The land was located in the County of Albemarle, named after his majesty's Lieutenant and Governor General of Virginia (1737-1754) and 2nd Earl of Albemarle, K.G. and near the community of Charlottesville named for Queen Charlotte wife of George III who lost the American colonies in 1781. Charlottesville was established as a town by act of the General Assembly of Virginia on December 23, 1762. Subsequent owners of this property were the following:

By deed dated July 25th, 1745, Michael Holland conveyed this land to Charles Lewis of Goochland.

By deed dated April 7th, 1758, Charles Lewis conveyed to Frances Jerdone of Louisa.

By deed dated April 11th, 1875, Francis Jerdone conveyed to George Divers.

By this will probated June 1st, 1830, George Divers devised this land to his nephew, Isaac White.

By deed dated November 23rd, 1840, Isaac White conveyed to John Coles Carter, 815 acres more or less.

By deed dated September 30th, 1852, John C. Carter conveyed to Bernard Peyton.

By his will probated July 3rd, 1854, Bernard Peyton devised this land to his widow, Mrs. Julia A. Peyton.

By deed dated January 1st, 1860, Mrs. Julia A. Peyton conveyed to Mrs. Mary Ann Harper her deed calling for 881 acres more or less.

By her will probated May 7th, 1877, Mrs. Harper devised this land to her daughter, Miss Lucilla Wood, and her son, Warner Wood.

Miss Lucilla Wood died intestate, leaving her brother, Warner Wood, as sole heir at law.

By his will probated September 2nd, 1902, Warner Wood devised Farmington to his widow, Mrs. Maggie L. Wood.

and

By deed dated September 15th, 1927, Mrs. Maggie L. Wood, and J. W. Fishburne, surviving Executor of Warner Wood, deceased, conveyed to Farmington, Incorporated.

COUNTY AND CITY ONE COMMUNITY

The history of Charlottesville is so closely associated with the history of Albemarle County, and vice versa, that the two are best considered together as one community. Until very recent years, the county population was usually double that of the city; now they are about even. Persons from these two political subdivisions have joined each other in participating in most of the important events in the general community, and only when the city seeks to annex county territory for its necessary expansion does it seem to matter much whether a person lives in the city or in the county. In the notes which follow, the question whether an event happened in or outside of the city limits will not be considered important, nor whether a person who left his or her mark upon the community lived in the city or in the county.

THE EXPLORERS

As stated earlier, the original Albemarle County area (the Counties of Albemarle, Fluvanna, Buckingham, Nelson, Amherst and Appomattox) was a virtual wilderness in which Indians still lurked when the first patents were granted, beginning in 1727. Johsua Fry and Peter Jefferson surveyed a good part of this large tract and opened it up to settlers. The intrepid Michael Woods and his group of Wallaces and others in coming into the area from the northwest helped materially to make the Piedmont section safe for home building. The expedition from Williamsburg sent on horseback by Governor Spotswood in 1716 to find a gap through the Blue Ridge Mountains had proved successful, and the northern part of the county was thereafter in the path of trade to and from the fertile Shenendoah Valley. But the men of Albemarle were not content to open up only their own territory, they were turning their eyes westward as the Indians retreated. The most active of these early adventurers was Dr. Thomas Walker, of Castle Hill, who preceded Daniel Boone into Kentucky by some 19 years. In 1750, Dr. Walker led a group of five other brave pioneers into the wilds of that part of western Virginia which became Kentucky. He kept accurate records and prepared a map that was very useful to later explorers. He has been called the "Father of Kentucky" and was duly memorialized at the Kentucky Bicentennial in 1950. A distinguished physician and scientist, Dr. Walker was also a leading political figure in Albemarle County. He was a member of the House of Burgesses, of the House of Delegates, and of the Conventions of 1775. Jefferson depended upon him for medical and scientific knowledge. He was Administrator of Peter Jefferson's estate and the Guardian of the youthful Thomas. One of his most valuable and satisfying traits was his ability to be friendly with and to understand the Indians he encountered in his travels. At Castle Hill he tutored back to a knowledge of the white man's civilization a young colonist who had been captured in early childhood by Indians in Kentucky. His house, Castle Hill, was a frequent rendezvous for such leading figures in the colony as James Madison, James Monroe, George Mason, Benjamin Harrison, John Robinson, Edmund Pendleton, Joshua Fry, John Harvie, Patrick Henry, William Preston, and Thomas Jefferson. It was fortunate for the county that he lived to be 79 years old.

Two other young explorers from this community achieved a very truly deserved national renown, namely, Captain Meriwether Lewis and Captain William Clark, who were chosen by President Jefferson in 1803 to explore the far reaches of the Trans-Mississippi region acquired in that year from France. The exploration plans were made in secret while Robert Livingston and James Monroe were still negotiating with Napoleon over Mississippi River rights. When the news of their purchase of the Louisiana Territory became known, the Lewis and Clark expedition was ready to proceed, and off they went with a force of 29 men from the army into vast regions where no white man had been known to set foot.

After going into winter quarters at St. Louis and picking up more men for help in part of the journey, they started up the Missouri in May of 1804. They reached the Pacific in November of 1805, started back in March of 1806, and reached St. Louis September 23, 1806. Their remarkable 4000 mile journey up the Missouri River, over the Rockies, and down the Columbia River to the Pacific Ocean, and their equally remarkable return, with the loss of only one man in death and one in desertion, make up a bright page in our country's history.

Meriwether Lewis, who was a grandson of Robert Lewis, of Belvoir, was born near Ivy. After his father's death, he lived for several years with his mother and step-father, Colonel John Marks, in Georgia. He returned to Albemarle as a young man and became one of President Jefferson's secretaries. The choice of William Clark to be co-leader of the exploration expedition was made by Lewis, but Jefferson readily agreed because he was also acquainted with the Clark family. George Rogers Clark, the Revolutionary War General, was born in Albemarle County, on what is now the Buena Vista farm of A. E. McMurdo, about two miles north of Charlottesville, but his younger brother, William, was born in Caroline County after the family moved thither from Albemarle. As a reward for his service, Meriwether Lewis was named Governor of the Missouri Territory, but he had a tragic death on October 11, 1809, while passing through Tennessee on his way from St. Louis to Washington for a conference with the President. He was only 35 when death cut short his career. William Clark in later years was a territorial governor of Missouri, and from 1822 to his death in 1838, he was superintendent of Indian affairs in St. Louis.

MILITARY INCIDENTS

When Albemarle County was formed in 1745, it will be recalled that Joshua Fry was named the first "Lieutenant of the County", Peter Jefferson was Lieutenant-Colonel, Allen Howard was Major, and William Cabell, Joseph Thompson, Charles Lynch, Thomas Ballou, David Lewis, James Daniel, James Nevel, and James Martin were Captains.

The local militia was frequently engaged in defenses against Indian raids. In the French and Indian War in 1754 a regiment was raised in Virginia and Fry became its Colonel. George Washington was second in

Some of these brave volunteer firemen can be recognized, as follows: 1st row (left to right) J. Vincent Perley (silk hat), C. D. Carter, James S. Leitch, R. R. Case, Lew Wood (holding horn), B. E. Jefferies, Frank Gilmer, Frank Beale, and W. A. Lankford (brandishing axe); 2nd row J. E. Gleason, next two unidentified, Dr. Hugh T. Nelson (holding implement), A. D. Payne, T. J. Williams (wearing derby), next three unidentified, H. W. Barksdale, J. C. Matthews (holding implement), George B. Goodyear, and last man unidentified. Other men then in the Company not named above were W. W. Allen, H. Balz, L. M. Bowman, F. J. Carter, A. V. Conway, C. R. Dillard, S. J. Dudley, R. W. Duke, H. P. Edwards, Q. G. Eddins, L. S. command as Lieutenant-Colonel. Near Fort Willis, now Cumberland, Maryland, Fry had a fall from his horse, became ill and died on May 31, 1754. His burial place at Wills' Creek near the Fort had this inscription: "Under this tree lies the body of THE GOOD, THE JUST AND THE NOBLE FRY". Thus ended prematurely the life of Albemarle's leading citizen at that time.

The Revolutionary War period found this community enthusiastically responsive to Thomas Jefferson's call to freedom in his immortal Declaration of Independence. In fact, there were so few Tories, that those who were British sympathizers became known as "——— the Tory". Notable among this group was Francis Jerdome, "the Tory", who built the first residence on his Farmington plantation.

When the Royal Governor-General, Lord Dunmore, attempted to remove the colonial stock of gunpowder from Williamsburg to ships in the harbor in 1775 a group of the Albemarle County Militia under Captain Charles Lewis, of North Garden, marched to Williamsburg in protest. The men who made this match on May 2, 1775, were the following (according to Woods' History of Albemarle County, p. 364): Charles Lewis, Capt.; George Gilmer, Lieut.; John Marks, Lieut.; William Wood, Sergeant; William T. Lewis, Sergeant; John Martin, Sergeant; Fred William Wells, Corporal; Thomas Martin, Jr., Corporal; David Allen, Corporal; John Lowry, Drummer; and Privates Edward Garland, John Henderson, Isaac Wood, Falvy Frazier, Charles Lilburn Lewis, James Quarles, Rueben Lindsay, and William Johnson.

On July 11, 1775, under the leadership of Lieut. George Gilmer, a group of 22 members of the same company marched again to Williamsburg in further protest of Lord Dunmore's actions.

The two patriots most active in these volunteer activities in this early period were Charles Lewis, of North Garden, and Dr. George Gilmer, of Pen Park. Lewis was a son of Robert Lewis of Belvoir, and his wife Jane Meriwether, daughter of Nicholas Meriwether. The Meriwethers and the Lewises were among the largest landowners in the county. Charles Lewis was captain of the first volunteer company raised in Albemarle and Colonel of the first regiment formed in this area. In the Revolution he was Colonel of the Fourteenth Virginia Regiment. Dr. Gilmer was a physician, the son of an immigrant physician from Scotland, who came to Albemarle from Williamsburg prior to 1775 and married Lucy, daughter of Dr. Thomas Walker, of Castle Hill. Attention has been called to him heretofore in these notes as a resident of Pen' Park and of the house on the corner of Jefferson and Union Streets in Charlottesville. Such was his zeal for the Commonwealth of Virginia that he adapted the ordinance passed by the General Assembly in 1776 (See Hening's Statutes, Vol. 9—William Waller Hening, compiler of the Virginia Statutes was a lawyer of the Albemarle County Bar) into an oath for his neighbors and then set about to procure their signatures to it, on the theory that those who did not sign could be suspected of treason. It is said that he circulated many copies, posting some at the Court House on Court Days. In four instances the same person signed twice, namely, Daniel Coleman, William Wingfield, Peter Balieu (Ballou) and William Leak. In his original notes which are now the property of the Virginia Historical Society there appears in his handwriting a copy of the oath and a list of the 207 (203 different) signers. Some of the spellings vary from the spellings recorded elsewhere of these names, but the list is a very interesting one. The persons listed were residents of the area then embraced within the limits of Albemarle County, which area then was approximately what it is today.

The foregoing document, which was being circulated for signatures between 1777 and 1779 bears a date of April 21, 1779. It has frequently been called "The Albemarle Declaration of Independence". Woods in his History lists the signers at page 365. The wording of the oath and the list of signers given below are taken from Dr. Gilmer's notes (although all the names are not in the same order):

"We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, do swear that we renounce and refuse all allegiance to George the Third, King of Great Britain, his heirs and successors, and that I (sic) will be faithful and bear True allegiance to the Commonwealth of Virginia, as a free and independent State, and that I will not at any (time) do or cause to be done any matter or thing that will be prejudicial or injurious to the freedom and independence thereof as declared by Congress, and also that I will discover and make known to some one Justice of the Peace for the said State all treasons or traitorous con-

JACK JOUETT'S RIDE

Charlottesville had a moment of glory in the Revolution when it served as the capital of the Commonwealth in early June of 1781, and John (Jack) Jouett, Jr., namesake of his father, who was then proprietor of the Swan Tavern on Charlottesville's Public Square, had a moment of even greater glory when his historic ride was the means of saving the lives of the retiring Governor Thomas Jefferson and of the members of the General Assembly who were meeting here. In that spring the British Commander, Lord Cornwallis, aided by the American traitor, Benedict Arnold, was pressing the Virginia forces under Lafayette, and the latter were retreating westward toward the mountains. The Assembly had forsaken Williamsburg for Richmond as a temporary capital, and on May 10th, the Assembly adjourned in Richmond to meet in Charlottesville on May 24th. Forty members of the Assembly met in Charlottesville, including Thomas Jefferson, the outgoing Governor, and Thomas Nelson, Jr., the Governor-Elect. Richard Henry Lee, Benjamin Harrison, and Patrick Henry were also there. On learning that the Legislature felt relatively safe in Charlottesville, Cornwallis decided upon a bold move, which had it been as successful as planned might have enabled him to negotiate an American surrender. With great secrecy he sent his ace cavalry officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Banastre Tarleton, with 180 of his dragons and 70 mounted infantry, on a rapid ride from Hanover County to Charlottesville, on orders to capture Jefferson, Nelson, Henry, and as many of the Legislators as they could find.

By good fortune, Captain Jack Jouett happened to be at Cuckoo Tavern in Louisa County as Tarleton and his men passed by on the evening of June 3rd. Suspecting their mission, Jouett mounted his horse and struck out cross country to spread the alarm that "the British are coming", as Paul Revere had done in Massachusetts. However, while Revere traveled the village roads, Jouett rode over little known roads and through plain wilderness in his desperate gamble of time with Tarleton. Tarleton had 60 or more miles to go over the main road to Charlottesville while Jouett's "crow flies" route through the unsettled country was about 45 miles. Jouett reached Milton about dawn and may have changed horses there. At any rate, he won the race and was able to warn Jefferson at Monticello and the Legislators in Charlottesville of the approaching danger. By reason of this warning, Jefferson was in hiding, probably at Enniscorthy, or possibly in the Wingfield barn, when Tarleton's representative, Capt. McLeod, reached Monticello, and all but 7 of the Legislators escaped to Staunton. These 7 were captured and held prisoners until freed by exchange after Yorktown. By riding boldly as a decoy, Jouett helped one of the delegates, General Stevens, to ride untouched through the British lines and proceed on to Staunton. A month later the Virginia Assembly directed a Colonel Meriwether to "procure an elegant sword for Captain Jouett on the best terms he can for contingent war-rants". This "elegant sword" as a mark of Virginia's gratitude was presented to Captain Jouett in Kentucky some five years later, after his emigration to Mercer County. While Mercer County was still a part of Virginia, Jouett represented it in the Virginia Assembly; when Kentucky became a state, he represented the same county in the Kentucky Legislature.

TARLETON'S RAID

While Tarleton was in Charlottesville he is supposed to have destroyed many of the early county records then in the court house. He spared Monticello but severely ravaged Jefferson's Elk Hill plantation on the James River. Tarleton is said to have passed his one night in Charlottesville at The Farm, the Nicholas Meriwether residence then occupied by Mrs. Nicholas Lewis, his nephew's wife. Colonel Nicholas Lewis, who was then in the field with the Virginia Militia, was a very prominent citizen of this community. Jefferson said of him: "This member of the family of Lewises was endeared to all who knew him by his inflexible probity, courteous disposition, benevolent heart, and engaging modesty and manners. He was the umpire of all private differences of his county, selected always by both parties".

GENERAL GEORGE ROGERS CLARK

Another son of Albemarle, General George Rogers Clark, made a most far reaching contribution to his country. He was living in Kentucky when the Revolutionary War began. He is said to have walked all the way to Williamsburg to entreat Governor Patrick Henry for aid in raising a volunteer force in the Kentucky counties of Virginia. He was commissioned to do so, and what he did with a pitifully small army of hardy Kentuckians is almost unbelievable. At the Battle of Vincennes in February, 1779, he routed the British garrison, and from then until the end of the war he was able to keep the British from assembling in force in any part of the area from the Ohio to the Great Lakes and was also able to win the sympathetic support of the French settlers to American claims to the whole region. Thus, he became known to history as the "Conqueror of the Northwest Territory". The effect of his brilliant work was to have this whole area, comprising the present states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin and a part of Minnesota, recognized as American occupied land when the treaty was made with England.

LOCAL MILITIA AND LAFAYETTE

The Virginia Militia units from this community, the predecessors of the Monticello Guard, were especially active in service under Lafayette in the maneuverings in this area preceding his union with Washington's forces before Yorktown. Hence, it was fitting that when Lafayette made what might be called a "visit of state" to this community in 1824 the old soldiers rallied to meet him as he entered the County. At Boyd's Tavern, on the Fluvanna line, William C. Rives, then a member of Congress and afterward Ambassador to France, made a speech of welcome and a newly formed company of horsemen called the Lafayette Guards escorted Lafayette to Monticello. The greeting between the old friends, Lafayette and Jefferson was a touching one. On hand for this occasion also was a company of Junior Volunteers, and the Commander of the group, Egbert R. Watson, then a boy of 14 and afterward Judge of the Albemarle Court, addressed the distinguished visitor with what was called at the time "appropriate gesture". While in the County Lafayette was given a great public reception in the Central Hotel (over a period of time three buildings were called Central Hotel—this one was attached to the Stone House on the lot opposite the present City Hall), and following that a dinner in the University's Rotunda. It is said there were 400 seated guests, but where they all sat is a live question, because the Rotunda did not then have its large "annex". V. W. Southall presided, and among those offering toasts were Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, William C. Rives, Thomas Jefferson Randolph, Thomas Walker Gilmer, Dr. Mann Page, William T. Gordon, N. P. Trist, Col. S. Carr, Richard Duke, and others. Lafayette made a farewell visit to Monticello in August, 1825, and was again given a dinner in the Rotunda, which was attended by Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, William Wirt, and many others.

THE CONVENTION TROOPS

This community had one other aftermath taste of the War of the Revolution, namely, the quartering here of the Saratoga Battle prisoners. When the British General, John Burgoyne surrendered his forces, many of whom were German mercenaries, to General Horatio Gates at Saratoga in October, 1777, a question arose as to what could be done with so large a body of prisoners. First, they were to be exchanged with the English, but Congress would not ratify this arrangement. Later, on the invitation of Col. John Harvie, a member of the Continental Congress from Albemarle County, about 4000 of these "Convention Troops", as they were called, were brought here in the winter of 1779. The non-commissioned soldiers, many of whom were Germans from Hesse and called Hessians, were placed in barracks on Ivy Creek, on a farm owned by Harvie and thenceforth called "The Barracks", while the British and German officers were allowed to rent private houses in the county. According to the Geneva Convention the officers and troops were paid their customary army stipends while they were held as prisoners. Many of them escaped to the nearby mountains and settled among the people there. Soon after the war those who remained were exchanged for American prisoners. Some of the local places leased to the officers were Colle (Baron Von Riedesel), Blenheim (General Philips), and Midmont (names unknown).

WAR BETWEEN THE STATES

By the time the American Civil War, or the War Between the States, as many prefer to call it, was in the making Albemarle County had over 32,000 residents. This number includes those residing in the town of Charlottesville and also includes slaves. There were about 600 students at the University.

Excitement at the University led to the formation of two military companies among the students, the Sons of Liberty, of which William Tabb was Captain, and the Southern Guard, of which Edward S. Hutter was Captain. The University authorities gave their sanction to these units on December 5, 1860. The Sons of Liberty uniform was a red shirt trimmed with black velvet and having brass buttons, trousers of black doeskin, cape of dark blue, with white cross belt and brass buckle. The Southern uniform was more prosaic, shirt, pantaloons and cap all in the same color of blue.

Early in February, 1861, a group of students hoisted a flag of the Confederacy over the Rotunda, but under faculty orders it was removed promptly. Even so, the flag was taken over on Carr's Hill and was given secret homage by many students until Virginia formally seceded from the Union in April.

In a parade on the Lawn on Jefferson's Birthday, April 13, 1861, in which the Albemarle Rifles and the Monticello Guard from the town participated, it was recognized that here were four units of potential soldiers almost ready for active duty. Together the groups comprised about 400 men fully equipped and partially trained. The surrender of Fort Sumter was announced on this occasion, and this news was received with wild enthusiasm. Shortly after the foregoing parade the University companies were invited to accompany the two Charlottesville companies on a raid of Harper's Ferry, an attempt to capture the large arsenal there. The student units were given a week's leave of absence. Under a Battalion Commander, George W. Carr, the Albemarle Rifles, commanded by Captain R. T. W. Duke, and the Monticello Guard under Captain William B. Mallory, and the two student companies made the trip by rail and foot to Harper's Ferry. Their coming appears to have been well advertised and the Federal forces had stripped and destroyed the arsenal, but many small arms were captured. On their return the student units soon disintegrated, as the members left for their homes to volunteer in local units destined for immediate service. In fact, it was recognized that there was too much good officer material in these college organizations to allow them to become activated as units.

THE MONTICELLO GUARD

In the foregoing adventure the Monticello Guard, now Charlottesville's most celebrated military organization, first saw full scale war service. The Monticello Guard may now be in point of continuous military service the oldest militia unit in the country. Soon afterward the Monticello Guard was ordered to Culpeper and became Company A in the 19th Virginia Regiment. In the latter Regiment the members of the Monticello Guard took part in many of the major battles of the War, such as Centreville, Williamsburg, Seven Pines, Gaines Mill, First Cold Harbor, Malvern Hill, Frazier's Farm, Second Manassas, Boonesborough, Sharpsburg, Gettysburg, Second Cold Harbor, and finally were captured as prisoners on April 6, 1865, just before the surrender, in an engagement near Sailor's Creek in the retreat from Petersburg. Many men won acclaim in this war as officers or men of the Monticello Guard. Among them were Colonel John Bowie Strange, Colonel R. T. W. Duke, Capt. J. C. Culin, Col. C. C. Wertenbaker, and many others.

MOSBY'S RANGERS

Perhaps the most spectacular figure of local origin who served in this War was Colonel John S. Mosby, whose calvary unit was known as "Mosby's Rangers". So swift were they in their harassing raids on Federal lines in the later stages of the War that the very mention of Mosby's name struck terror to the Northern forces. When General Sheridan and Custer raided Charlottesville in March, 1865, Mosby happened to be in town. Warned by John West but misunderstanding the position of the enemy, he is said to have escaped by riding audaciously through the Federal soldiers and by jumping the last barricade.

HOSPITAL CENTER

Charlottesville's principal role in the War Between the States was to be an important hospital center. In regular and makeshift hospitals, including the University's Rotunda, some 5300 sick and wounded men were treated here. Over 1200 who died here are buried in the Confederate Soldiers Cemetery near the University. The renowned Gen. Turner Ashby was first buried there, later removed to Winchester. The names of the men laid to rest in this Cemetery appear on bronze tablets on the four sides of a memorial monument erected there in 1893.

SYNOPSIS OF SCENES

Scene 1: CORONATION OF THE QUEEN

The Mounted Guard of Honor presents the flags under which Charlottesville has served in its 200 years. The Princesses of the Court of Honor arrive, and the Anniversary Queen is crowned.

Scene 2: OUT OF THE SHADOWS

The Saponi Indians, first inhabitants of this region, live in an ancient village along the banks of the Rivanna River. Here they bury their dead in large mounds, traces of which survive to this day.

Scene 3: INTO THE WEST

Before the arrival of the first white settlers, the Saponi migrate West and South, leaving their village, their hunting grounds, their tribal burial mounds.

Scene 4: A HERITAGE BEGINS

The early landowners send overseers and servants to this region to clear and cultivate the land before moving in with their families. Peter Jefferson, one of the early settlers, buys a home site on the Rivanna River for a bowl of arrack punch. He names his home "Shadwell." Here Thomas Jefferson is born April 13, 1743.

Scene 5: ALBEMARLE COUNTY IS FORMED

Albemarle is created from the western part of Goochland. A courthouse for the new county is built on the James River, one mile upstream from present-day Scottsville.

Scene 6: A NEW TOWN IS PLANNED

After Buckingham and Amherst Counties are carved from Albemarle, a new county seat is chosen. Survveyors are sent out early in 1762 to lay out streets and lots for a new town along the Rivanna River.

Scene 7: CHARLOTTESVILLE IS ESTABLISHED

The General Assembly names the new town Charlottesville in honor of Queen Charlotte, wife of George III of England. A bill establishing the town is signed by Governor Francis Fauquier on December 23, 1762.

Scene 8: A NEW YEAR'S BRIDE

On New Year's Day, 1772, Thomas Jefferson and Martha Wayles Skelton are married.

Scene 9: THE CRY FOR FREEDOM

In 1775, the Albemarle militia, under Lieutenant George Gilmer, marches to Williamsburg to protest tyrannical actions of Governor Dunmore. In Philadelphia the following year, Thomas Jefferson drafts the Declaration of Independence.

Scene 10: FIRST THEATER IN ALBEMARLE

Four thousand British and German prisoners captured at the Battle of Saratoga are quartered in Albemarle County in 1779-80 at the Barracks. The prisoners build a theater and present plays.

Scene 11: THE RIDE OF JACK JOUETT

In 1781, the capital of Virginia is moved to Charlottesville when British forces threaten Richmond. British Colonel Tarleton leads a cavalry troop on a swift raid to Charlottesville to capture the Legislature and Governor Jefferson. Jack Jouett learns of the raid when the horsemen pass through Louisa. He races his horse over shortcuts, reaching Monticello in time for Jefferson and his family to escape.

Scene 12: ADJOURNMENT

Jouett warns the General Assembly of the approaching British horsemen. The legislators meet hurriedly and adjourn to Staunton.

Scene 13: CAPTURE OF DANIEL BOONE

Daniel Boone, a member of the General Assembly, delays too long in leaving Charlottesville. He is captured by the British and held prisoner three days.

THERE appeared in 1856 a work entitled "Bohn's Album and Autographs of the University of Virginia" accompanied by a short history and illustrated by twenty steel engravings of portraits of professors and officers. The work was published by Casimir Bohn, Washington, D. C. In 1859, copies of this album were sold at the bookstore of M. McKennie and G. T. Jones, University of Virginia.

The print entitled, "View of the University of Virginia—Charlottesville and Monticello," pictured above, was numbered among the twenty steel engravings appearing in Bohn's Album. The engraving was drawn from nature, probably taken from Lewis Mountain. Pictured is the University of Virginia with Charlottesville and Monticello in the distant background. A large copy of this engraving was printed in color by Schase and Company, Baltimore, Maryland. Copies of this engraving have long been a collectors item and copies now are very scarce.

the old Anatomical Hall. The School of Medicine opened November 7, 1825 under the designation, "The School of Anatomy and Medicine." Its establishment is noted in the minutes of the Board of Visitors in the handwriting of Thomas Jefferson at their first meeting on April 7, 1824. The Anatomical Hall was demolished in 1938 to give space for the present Alderman Library.

The long building attached to the north side of the Rotunda was added in 1851-53. Robert Mills designed this rectangular brick structure. The building itself was not unattractive but the addition to the Rotunda was later generally considered a mistake. In 1895, a fire due to faulty wires began in the Annex. The flames quickly spread to the Rotunda causing the original dome to collapse and destroying the interior floor plan design by Thomas Jefferson. The Annex was completely destroyed and was never rebuilt.

Stanford White was the architect who rebuilt the present interior of the Rotunda and added the north portico with the northwest and southeast esplanades. Plans are being made to restore the interior of the Rotunda to Jefferson's original design.

Pictured to the right in the Bohn print are the original four rows of buildings designed by Jefferson. From the Rotunda, the Lawn stretches into a long rectangle toward the south with five distinct houses, or pavillions facing across the Lawn on either side. These ten pavillions are connected by student dormitories and united by covered ways, the Colonnades. Paralleling the Lawn and Pavillions, to the rear along either side are rows of student dormitories, East and West Ranges. Equally spaced within the Ranges are three larger buildings, "Hotels" to accommodate student dining in the early days of the University. Dormitories and "Hotels" along the Ranges are united by covered ways, the Arcades.

Serpentine walls, one brick thick, enclose the gardens which are located on either side between the Lawn and the Ranges. The gardens are in the early years of the University were used as practical back yards by the professors and hotel keepers. In many instances, time began to take its toll in tumbling bricks and tangled masses of vegetation.

In 1948-52, the gardens on the west side between West Lawn and West Range were restored by the Garden Club of Virginia. Work is now in progress for the restoration of the east gardens. As shown by the ground-plan map, the gardens and the serpentine walls form a unique design in the original plan of the University's founder, Thomas Jefferson.

A large copy of the Bohn engraving printed in color by Schase and Company may be seen in an exhibition of old prints and photographs in the gallery next to the manuscript room of the Alderman Library through July and August, 1962. Gallery hours are from 9:00 A. M. to 4:00 P. M. The print is shown in conjunction with the Edwin M. Betts collection of old prints and photographs of the University of Virginia.

215 ALBEMARLE
CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

Custer made a diversionary attack on Charlottesville to destroy the railroad bridge but got no further than Rio, about four miles north of the town. According to local historians, John R. Brown and Margaret Fowler Clark, General Grant sent Custer to raid Charlottesville as a decoy to attract Lee's attention from a surprise maneuver by General Kilpatrick to capture Richmond. One account of the reason for Custer's withdrawal before accomplishing his main mission was the accidental explosion of one of Captain Chew's cannons, which so frightened two of Custer's columns that in their confusion they began firing on each other. The ladies of Charlottesville made and presented to Captain R. P. Chew a flag dedicated to him as their "Savior", a flag which his battery preserved throughout later battles.

SHERIDAN'S RAID

Charlottesville's most dangerous encounter with Federal troops occurred on March 3, 1865, only a few weeks before Appomattox, when General Sheridan and his younger aid, General Custer, passed through Charlottesville on their way to join Grant. The town was then practically defenseless, because Sheridan had routed Early's forces in the Shenandoah Valley. As Sheridan approached the town over the muddy Staunton Turnpike his vanguard forces were met just west of the University by the town council under Mayor Christopher L. Fowler and by a Committee of the University's Faculty composed of Col. Thomas Preston, the Rector of the Board of Visitors, Mr. Socrates Maupin, Chairman of the Faculty, and Mr. John B. Minor, the great law professor. Mayor Fowler in effect surrendered the town to save it from harm and Mr. Minor as spokesman for the University besought the Union forces to spare the University. These entreaties were in the main honored. The Woolen Mills were burned, the railroad tracks leading to Lynchburg were torn up, several houses were raided for provisions, and many horses and Negro slaves were carried away. However, in view of the burning and pillaging by Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley the fate of Charlottesville might have been much worse.

On May 5, 1909, the local War veterans of the Confederacy held a reunion in Charlottesville, and on this occasion before a very large assemblage the Confederate Memorial monument on Court Square was dedicated. The speakers were Captain Carl McCarthy of Richmond, U. S. Senator John W. Daniel of Virginia and Congressman S. J. McCall of Massachusetts.

ALBEMARLE LIGHT HORSE TROOP

In the latter part of the last century many of the horsemen of Albemarle County became members of a local cavalry unit, called the Albemarle Light Horse Troop. This organization was listed as Troop K in the 1st Regiment of Cavalry of the Virginia Militia.

WAR WITH SPAIN

In the War with Spain in 1898 the Monticello Guard again volunteered for duty and saw training service in this Country, but the War ended before it was called to duty on foreign shores.

Growing With The Community

Since coming to Charlottesville in 1954, we at USI have been vitally interested in the sound growth of the entire community . . . Happily reflected in this growth has been a healthy growth picture of our own.

Depending, in the main, on local sources USI has continually increased its employee group in the intervening seven years . . . and at the same time, increased its physical facilities over 200%.

Traditionally, USI has sought to present a stable progressive picture of industry. If we have accomplished this, credit is due our loyal, dependable USI and community "family".

WORLD WAR I

In World War I, however, the Monticello Guard as a part of the 116th Infantry Regiment of the 29th Division, was in several of the decisive engagements in France, especially in the Chateau-Thierry and Meuse-Argonne sectors. The Company had many casualties, both in killed and wounded.

Another local unit which served with distinction in World War I was Base Hospital No. 41. This unit was organized at the University of Virginia under the leadership of Dr. (later Lt. Col.) William H. Goodwin. It was stationed at St. Denis, near Paris, in France. It went into operation while the Second Battle of the Marne was in progress, and being less than 20 miles from the battle lines it was almost a field hospital for a few weeks. Its staff received many French and American decorations for notable service. Its Chaplin was the young Rector at St. Paul's Memorial Church at the University, The Reverend Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., the recently retired Bishop of Southern Ohio.

WORLD WAR II

In World War II the Monticello Guard, again a part of the 29th Division, went ashore on D-Day on Omaha Beach. From then on it fought without relief for 45 days in some of the most sanguinary battles of the War. Three of its men were awarded Congressional Medals.

A hospital unit was again organized at the University of Virginia Hospital for service in this War. Evacuation Hospital No. 8 was brought into being through the efforts largely of Dr. (later Colonel) Staige D. Blackford. Its Chaplain was also a Rector of St. Paul's Memorial Church, The Reverend William H. Laird. This unit followed the Army through North Africa and into Italy.

Thus, it is seen that when their country calls men of valor from this community have always volunteered in her defense.

PERSONS OF PROMINENCE

Few communities of the size of Charlottesville and Albemarle County have so vivid a heritage of notable men and women. Many of them, such as Joshua Fry, Peter and Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, Dr. Thomas Walker, Michael Woods, the Lewises, the Clarks, Dr. George Gilmer, Jack Jouett, and the military leaders have already been mentioned. Many persons were born here and gained their fame elsewhere, while others became distinguished while living here or because of their association with the University or with other local institutions.

GOVERNORS OF VIRGINIA

Native sons who have served our Commonwealth as Governor have been Thomas Jefferson (1779-1781), James Monroe (1799-1802, 1811), Wilson Cary Nicholas (1814-1816) of Warren, Thomas Mann Randolph (1819-1822) of Edge Hill, Thomas Walker Gilmer (1840-1841) and John S. Battle (1950-1954). Other Governors who have resided in our county or city have been Edmund Randolph (1786-1788) at Viewmont, General Fitzhugh Lee (1886-1890) on Ridge Street, and Colgate W. Darden, Jr. (1942-1946) at the University. Two Lieutenant-Governors who came to mind were Shelton F. Leake, of Charlottesville, and "Parson" Massey, of Albemarle County. Leake was a brilliant lawyer, and he also served this district in the Congress. When Sheridan raided Charlottesville in 1865, Mrs. Leake prevented her husband's capture by exhibiting him briefly as a corpse. Massey lived at Ash Lawn and added the front portico to the original Monroe house.

AMBASSADORS

Jefferson, as all know, succeeded Benjamin Franklin as President Washington's Minister to France, and James Monroe served as Ambassador or Minister to France, England and Spain. William Short, of Indian Camp (now Morven), was Minister to the Netherlands under Washington. Hugh Nelson was Minister to Spain in 1823. Dabney Carr, Jefferson's great-nephew, was Minister to Turkey from 1843 to 1846. William Cabell Rives, after being in the United States Senate was twice Ambassador to France, first 1829-1832, and again 1849-1853. Andrew Stevenson, for many years Speaker of the U. S. House of Representatives, was named Minister to the Court of St. James in 1836. He introduced the Albemarle Pippin to Queen Victoria and saw it become the favorite apple of England. In recent times, Stanley Woodward, of Colle, has been Ambassador to Canada, and in 1962, President Kennedy appointed William C. Battle, of Charlottesville, son of former Governor John S. Battle, U. S. Ambassador to Australia. Perhaps there are others. A great many local men, such as Barclay Rives, James Lindsay Patton, to name two, have served with lesser rank in foreign posts.

THE RIVES AND MARTIN "MACHINES"

Many local men have represented the Commonwealth of Virginia in the U. S. Senate and in the House of Representatives. The most recent one was Judge John W. Fishburne, who was a member of the Congress from 1930 to 1932. Suffice it to mention only two others here, namely, the great orator, William Cabell Rives, and the great politician, Thomas S. Martin. Each of these men from his vantage point as a power in the United States Senate used his influence to develop a "political machine" in Virginia. Each is said to have had Virginia patronage in the palm of his hand. While these machines were in full vigor few aspiring candidates for office could hope for victory without "the Senator's endorsement". As in the case in more recent years respecting the so-called Byrd machine, those in power permitted only able and honorable men to have their patronage.

WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD

Among the great men whose source was Albemarle County was William Harris Crawford, of Georgia, who very nearly became Monroe's successor as President. His Harris and Crawford antecedents were of old Virginia families, of the English Harrises who came to New Kent County in 1615 and of the Scotch Crawfords who were in James City County by 1625. Major Robert Harris, one of his grandfathers, moved from Hanover to Brown's Cove in Albemarle County in 1750, and about the same time his Crawford grandfather, David Crawford, came also from Hanover to the area near Afton which was Albemarle County until 1761, but after that date was Amherst County. Frances Harris (Woods in error calls her Elizabeth), aged about 15, married Joel Crawford in 1760. William Harris Crawford, one of six sons, was born near Afton on February 24, 1872. The family moved to South Carolina in 1774 and to Columbia County, Georgia, in 1783. In due time William Harris Crawford, who was 6 feet 3 inches tall and of large proportions, became a prominent lawyer in the Broad River County. Then in suc-

INSTITUTE OF TEXTILE TECHNOLOGY

Located in the Farmington Area on a fifteen-acre site about two and a half miles west of Charlottesville, on U. S. Highway 250, is the Institute of Textile Technology, a cooperative research and educational institution owned and financed by mills of the textile industry. Founded in 1944 by leading executives of the textile industry, the institute was chartered by the Commonwealth of Virginia exclusively for scientific, literary and educational purposes. Its three principal objectives are to conduct research on textile material and processes; train men at the graduate level in the fundamental sciences and in textile technology, and to provide a library and information service, keeping member mills abreast of scientific and technical developments in the textile industry.

On a beautifully landscaped knoll, overlooking the surrounding countryside, the 16-room house of the original estate is now used for the Library and Academic Offices. The charm of its Jeffersonian architecture has been extended to more recently constructed buildings. Original boxwood gardens have been preserved and with the flowering shrubs, create the central theme of the grounds.

North of the Library-Academic building, and across the gardens, is the Applications building, a three-story brick structure designed to house the research laboratories.

The Institute engages in both fundamental and applied research for members in the fields of physics, engineering, chemistry, fiber technology, and operations research as related to textile fibers, fabrics, machinery, instruments, chemical finishes, etc.

Operating in conjunction with member textile companies located throughout the eastern United States from Maine to Texas, and representing more than five and a half million spindles, the Institute has made many research contributions toward quality, productivity, and economic improvements in the industry. More than one hundred graduates have received the Master of Science degree and their progress in the industry is a credit to the foresight of the IIT founders.

As a center of technical knowledge for the processors of fibers into yarns and fabrics, the Institute continues toward its goal of progress in precision manufacturing.

Maud Woods

cession he went to the State Legislature and to the United States Senate in 1807. He was re-elected in 1811 without opposition. In 1813, after declining President Madison's tender of the office of Secretary for War, he was sent as Minister to France. In his two years in France he became a very close friend of the Marquis of Lafayette. On his return in 1815 he was appointed Secretary of War but gave up this office in a few months to become Secretary of the Treasury. He remained Secretary of the Treasury under both Presidents Madison and Monroe.

He had been strongly urged to oppose Mr. Monroe for the nomination for the presidency. He declined on the grounds that he was young enough to wait; and although he gave his support to Monroe his friends persisted in their efforts and Monroe's majority over him was a small one. In 1824 he consented to run for the presidency. Three of President Monroe's cabinet members were candidates: Secretary of State John Quincy Adams, Secretary of War John C. Calhoun, and Secretary of the Treasury, William H. Crawford. The other candidates were those archrivals Henry Clay and Andrew Jackson. No candidate received an electoral college majority, and the election had to be made by the House of Representatives. Calhoun was elected vice-president, and so the vote for president was among the three who had the highest electoral votes—Jackson, Adams and Crawford. Clay threw his support to Adams and the latter won on the first ballot. Clay was made Secretary of State, and Crawford was again offered the appointment to Secretary of Treasury. However, by the time of the election in the House it had become known that Crawford had suffered a partial paralysis, brought on, it was said, by an unskilled physician's prescription for treating his case of erysipelas.

Because of impaired health Crawford retired from government service and returned to his home in Georgia. The remainder of his days were spent as a very able Circuit Court judge. Crawford was a Southern Conservative who served his country well, especially in keeping the credit of the nation high and its public debt low. He died in 1834.

LADY ASTOR

Another person who spent much of her childhood in Albemarle County—at Mirador, the home of her father, Col. Chiswell Dabney Langhorne—was Lady Nancy Langhorne Astor, who became the first woman to be elected a member of the British Parliament. Her husband, a son of the American emigrant William Waldorf Astor, inherited a title and considerable wealth, but his Virginia-born wife had never been content merely to sit and knit. Her able representation of her constituency soon quieted those who said loudly that a woman's place is only in the home. Lady Astor's sister, Irene Langhorne, was the lovely prototype of the "Gibson Girl," which her artist husband, Charles Dana Gibson, made famous in the old "Life" magazine.

MAUD WOODS

It is appropriate that one of Charlottesville's own daughters should be celebrated for her loveliness. This lady was Maud Woods, 20 year old daughter of Micajah Woods, who was a lawyer and a leading citizen of Charlottesville in 1898. In that year a New York photographer, named Alexander Black, came to Charlottesville to make a picture of her, because for the Confederate Reunion in Atlanta she had been chosen by the veterans of the Army of Northern Virginia (C.S.A.) as their sponsor in the "Rosebud Garden of Girls". In granting permission to Mr. Black to take the picture Mr. Woods put upon him the condition that he could not use Maud's name in any public showing of the picture. Therefore it was as an anonymous American beauty that Miss Woods was judged by a distinguished jury appointed to select the persons whose heads would appear on either side of a seal for the Pan American Exposition in Buffalo, New York, in 1901. According to the Daily Progress, the jury was composed of "Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, a noted actress; Harriet Hubbard Ayer, a famous beauty of the day; Sen. Chauncey M. Depew of New York; Irving R. Wiles, J. Wells Champney and J. G. Brown, three of America's foremost portrait painters and all members of the National Academy; and the sculptor, August Langenbahn". The jury chose the actress Maxine Elliott to represent South America and Miss Woods to represent North America. And so it was that the lovely head of Maud Woods, engraved by Langenbahn, appeared on this exposition seal, and Miss Woods was the "Miss America" of her day.

In commenting on the jury's choices Senator Depew had this to say: "Artist and laymen must agree in commending the choice of the committee that believes it has solved the riddle of beauty. For a flawless exposition of classic outline, of perfect physical harmony, study the face and figure of Maxine Elliott who so well deserves to be a natural favorite. For flower-like sweetness, unconventional perfection and almost seraphic purity of expression study Miss Woods, the Virginia beauty".

OTHER WOMEN OF DISTINCTION

Perhaps the group of women known as the "Gallant Ladies", who made up the Soldiers' Relief Association in Charlottesville in the last years of the Civil War, and who then founded the Ladies Benevolent Association for alleviation of post-war suffering, should be the most honored ladies in our history. One of their important accomplishments was the establishment of the Piedmont Hospital, which remained in operation until 1892. For 30 years these ladies were the charity mainstay of the community. Prominent among them, according to the Daily Progress, were the following: Mrs. Richard K. Meade, wife of the Rector of Christ Church; Mrs. George Perkins, wife of a leading attorney; Mrs. Egbert Watson, Judge Watson's wife; Mrs. Green Peyton, wife of the University's Proctor; Mrs. John Singleton, Mrs. Thompson Brown, and Mrs. Charles Venable, and later Mrs. S. S. Letterman and Judge Watson's daughter, Miss Hay Watson.

Amelie Rives Troubetzkoy, daughter of William Cabell Rives and wife of Prince Pierre Troubetzkoy, a Russian artist, named for her French God-mother, Queen Amelie, was a well-known American fiction writer as well as the charming host of Castle Hill in her later life.

A writer in a different field, the late Mary Rawlings, who inspired and was one of the founders of the Albemarle County Historical Society and of the Civic League of Charlottesville and Albemarle County and was Honorary President of the Historical Society until her death in 1961, spent an honored and useful lifetime in research and in recording in several publications historical notes of this community. It is because she carefully sifted fact from fancy that much local history can now be accurately reported.

Mrs. Murray Boocock, of Castalia, in the second quarter of this century was one of the most public spirited citizens this community has had. She gave liberally of her time, her means, and her great talents for better health, education, and recreation in this city and county. In more recent years, Mrs. James Gordon Smith, of Rose Hill, who was chosen by the Civic League as the community's outstanding citizen in 1960, has in boundless energy and good taste done much for the beautification of the city and county and for better living among the poor and handicapped people of this area.

Two public school teachers, Miss Carrie Burnley, the first principal of the McGuffey Elementary School, and Miss Serepta Moran, the first principal of the Venable Elementary School, left enduring marks of their learning and their character upon two generations of school children who attended these schools.

Among the many other women who have rendered distinguished public service, two stand out conspicuously, Mrs. Virginia Carver Beck and Mrs. Bessie Dunn Miller, who in their lifetime in the first half of this century did so much for the rural residents through home demonstration units and in the development of clinics for the treatment of cancer and other serious diseases. Mrs. Beck was awarded a certificate of merit by the president of Virginia Polytechnic Institute for her contribution to Virginia farm life, a recognition given to two other women in the State before 1947. She was the first woman member of the Agriculture Conference Board of Virginia, and at her home at Milton in 1916 the first Home Demonstration Club in Albemarle County was formed. Mrs. Miller was for 20 years the County Home Demonstration Agent.

Mention here is not out of place for a daughter of Charlottesville, Virginia Sinclair, of Park Street, who married a University of Virginia medical graduate, Dr. Walter Aylett Hawes; and went to New York. There she became concerned about neglected children and in 1898 started the first Vacation Bible School in the Country. After Dr. Hawes retired they returned to Charlottesville to live.

PUBLIC BENEFACTORS

There have been many benefactors of this community in its long history, some through gifts of substance and others through the example of their lives. Perhaps three of those who have given wisely of their wealth deserve mention over the others: Samuel Miller of Albemarle County and Paul Goodloe McIntire and John West of Charlottesville.

Samuel Miller was born (in 1792) of humble origin in the Batesville section of the county. In his struggle in his early years for education and subsistence he came to recognize and appreciate many of the needs of the people of the county, and so in later life when he began

High Street. He attended the University in 1878-1879 and then went to Chicago at the age of 19 and became employed by a coffee and tea importer. Through ability and hard work he worked into the investment business and moved to New York. About the end of World War I he returned to live in Charlottesville. Then a very wealthy man, he set about giving his money away, not to those who asked for it but where he personally recognized an opportunity to improve the health, welfare and culture of his community. His gifts to the city, the county, and the University amounted in cash outlay to well over $1,000,000.00. Many of these gifts bear his name, McIntire Park, McIntire Library, McIntire School of Commerce, McIntire Wing at the University Hospital, etc. but most of them were given so inconspicuously that few people today realize our tremendous debt to this very thoughtful and very generous man. Certainly four outstanding statues which beautify our city will always bear witness to his desire to make Charlottesville a lovelier place. These are the Charles Keck statue of Stonewall Jackson, the Leo Lentelli statue of General Lee, the Charles Keck statue of Lewis and Clark, and the Robert Aitkin statue of George Rogers Clark.

John West, a Negro barber, who quietly amassed a large holding in Charlottesville real property, was a benefactor on a smaller scale, but many of his gifts were of as much benefit to the white people of the city as they were for the people of his own race. It is fitting that the first redevelopment area in the city is to bear his name. It was John West who informed Col. Mosby that Sheridan's men were looking for him, and in gratitude Mosby threw a silver dollar to West as he mounted his horse.

Another Negro leader in Charlottesville who has made important community contributions is Randolph White, editor of the Charlottesville and Albemarle Tribune and a prominent member of the N.A.A.C.P. However, it is in the field of his work as Supervisor of Inhalation Therapy of the University of Virginia Hospital where his greatest contribution has been made, for he has recently devised a way to regulate vapor temperatures during inhalation. His invention has been highly praised by Virginia physicians. He is the first Negro to be made a member of the American Association of Inhalation Therapists.

UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

The University of Virginia, of course, is an incalculably valuable asset to the community of Charlottesville and Albemarle County. With its cultural life and its medical center it gives Charlottesville many advantages which cities five times the size do not usually have. The community has special pride in the University because it was "fathered" and guided in its formative years by Thomas Jefferson, the county's most illustrious son. Of all his accomplishments Jefferson himself put his University as one of the three dearest to him. His tomb bears the epitaph that he asked to be put upon it, namely: "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, Author of the Declaration of Independence, of the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and Father of the University of Virginia."

The University was chartered in 1819. The cornerstone of the first building, Pavilion VII West Lawn (the Colonnade Club) had been laid on October 6, 1817, with great ceremony in the presence of Jefferson, Madison and Monroe. This was while the institution was called Central College. Monroe was then president and he and Madison were named to the first Board of Visitors of the University. Jefferson was the first Rector, and on his death Madison succeeded him as Rector.

The University has always made its learning and its facilities available to the community, and its professors and other officials have taken their places as responsible citizens in the community's life. Until 1905 the internal administration of the University was directed on the academic side by the chairman of the faculty and on the business and financial side by a proctor. However, as the University grew in size it was decided by the Board of Visitors that a president would be desirable. Woodrow Wilson was first chosen but declined the honor. Dr. Edwin Anderson Alderman, a North Carolinian, who was then President of Tulane University, was the next person invited. He accepted and was inaugurated as the University's first president on April 13, 1905. President Alderman, who died in 1931, was succeeded by his Assistant to the President and Dean of the Engineering Department, John Lloyd Newcomb. Following President Newcomb's death in 1954, former Governor Colgate W. Darden, Jr., became the third president. President Darden resigned in 1958 to return to private pursuits and one of the University's younger professors, Dr. Edgar F. Shannon, Jr., was elected fourth president. He was inaugurated October 6, 1959.

The first faculty was recruited by Jefferson, largely through the efforts of his agent, Francis Walker Gilmer, from English and European Universities. In the course of the years many eminent men and women have served on the University's faculty. To mention a few of them, there was William Holmes McGuffey, the author of the famous McGuffey Readers; Basil L. Gildersleeve, the renowned Latin and Greek scholar; John W. Mallet, the distinguished chemist; John B. Minor, the great teacher of law; Paul B. Barringer, the last chairman of the faculty, who founded the University of Virginia Hospital; and James Morris Page, the first Dean of the University under President Alderman. As might be expected, the University has had as students many men who have gone on to achieve great success in life. A list of the eminent alumni would fill many pages, but it should not be overlooked that Woodrow Wilson studied law here; that Dr. Walter Reed, the conqueror of yellow fever, received a medical degree from the University in 1869, when he was only seventeen years old; and that Edgar Allen Poe, the macabre poet and story teller, Admiral William F. ("Bull") Halsey, the World War II Naval hero, and not least among them Willim McGarvey Dudley, who in 1941 became the University's first All-American football player, were also sometime students here.

Two 4 star generals of World War II fame were of local origin as well as being University of Virginia graduates. Gen. A. A. Vandegrift, who was Commandant of the U. S. Marine Corps, was born in Charlottesville, and Gen. Carter B. Magruder, recently U. S. and U. N. Commander in Korea, was of Albemarle County stock.

The University had about 600 students when the War Between the States commenced, about 1500 on the outbreak of World War I, a few under 3000 when World War II began, and in 1962 has nearly 5000. Its physical plant has expanded proportionately, but care has always been taken architecturally to see that no new building shall appear to dominate the Rotunda. The Jeffersonian architectural standards and forms have been well preserved. Brick is still the facing of the buildings and the column and the arch have been used alternately in design. One great architectural mistake was made when a needed auditorium was attached to the north front of the Rotunda in 1853, but this annex, as it was called, was lost in the Rotunda fire of 1895 and was not replaced. When called in to design a new auditorium Stanford White, the eminent American architect, closed the south end of the Lawn with Cabell Hall and the two buildings on either side of it. Few persons today realize just how much of the University was designed by Stanford White. For example, in rebuilding the Rotunda White eliminated the intermediate ceiling with its pairs of ionic columns and made the interior one vault circled by large Corinthian columns.

SCENERY AND CULTURE

Albemarle County and Charlottesville lies in a very beautiful part of Virginia, in the Piedmont area of rolling hills, with streams in the valleys, open grazing land, fruit orchards, and wooded hillsides. In losing gradually their early height of some 20,000 feet, the Blue Ridge mountains have settled down to give the city and much of the county one of the most pleasing skyline views in America, and they have deposited enough good soil on the hills and in the valleys to provide a green carpeting. The latitude is that of southern Spain, Sicily, and southern Greece, in the middle of the Mediterranean (Charlottesville is almost squarely N-38°). In such a garden spot one would expect to find large and gracious houses and pleasing architecture, and so one does. Large industrial mills would be out of place, and the governmental authorities have been careful to admit smaller and so-called "clean" manufacturing plants, ones which use local labor largely and which do not make "messy" products. And so from early times this community, with its climate, its scenery, its historical associations, and its educational and cultural advantages, has been a favorite place for new residents of wealth and refinement.

The older part of Charlottesville around the "public square", with its brick buildings and white trim woodwork, has fortunately been quite well preserved, and by a design control ordinance adopted in 1956 this area's character will be continued. The county abounds in fine houses, both ancient plantation manor houses and fine modern residences. Most of the historic shrines have now been restored. The Monticello Foundation has made an historical show place of Jefferson's home, Monticello. Monroe's house on the mountain, Ash Lawn, has been partially restored. A Revolutionary period tavern, called Michie Tavern, after William Michie, the builder, has been removed to the road leading up the mountain to Monticello. Peter Jefferson's house, Shadwell, destroyed by fire when his children were small, has been reproduced. The gardens at the University lying between the Lawns and the Ranges are being restored within the original walls through the assistance of the Garden Club of Virginia.

This community has an unusually large number of garden clubs. The three oldest are the Albemarle Garden Club, established in 1913; Rivanna Garden Club, 1922; and Charlottesville Garden Club, 1948. Others with date of founding are as follows: Washington Park, 1945; Piedmont, 1954; Monticello, 1956; Boxwood, 1958; Keswick, 1958; Dogwood, 1960. The Washington Park Garden Club, called until 1951 the Washington Park Flower club, is the area's only all Negro garden club. With so many gardeners at work and so many local historic shrines open to the public it is small wonder that Charlottesville and Albemarle County are filled with visitors during Virginia's Garden Week at the end of April each year.

Attention should be called also to the large number of fine statues and monuments in the city and within the University grounds. Mention has been made above to the two Confederate memorial statues and to the four magnificent statues given to the city by Paul Goodloe McIntire. It must not be overlooked that Charles Keck's statue of Stonewall Jackson has been acclaimed by leading world critics as one of the truly great equestrian statues of the world. Incidentally, Mr. Keck used Mr. McIntire's riding horse as his model for "Old Sorrell," General Jackson's favorite mount. Other statues of high quality are the one of Thomas Jefferson by Sir Moses Ezekiel, which stands north of the Rotunda, and the symbolic winged aviator near Alderman Library by Gutzon Borglum, memorializing James Rogers McConnell, the first University alumnus to be killed in World War I, when as a volunteer member of the French Lafayette Escadrille he lost his life ahead of America's entry in the war. Statues of good design of Washington and Jefferson face each other near the south end of the Lawn, and was staying there in 1865 when Lee came up to see him and discuss the question whether he should accept the Washington College offer.

Many of the local ministers were well known and honored by the whole community. Especially was this true respecting Dr. George L. Petrie, who was Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church from 1878 to 1929, and who was the special chaplain of most of the military organizations of the community. Dr. Henry Alford Porter, Pastor of the First Baptist Church from 1929 to 1945 was active in civic affairs and was highly regarded throughout the city. In recent years the ubiquitous Rector of Christ Church, the Reverend Herbert A. Donovan, known to nearly everyone as "Mike" Donovan, has gladdened with a cheery greeting or a merry quip many a person in the community irrespective of his church affiliation.

Quite a few of the ministers in the early days of the county and city taught school as a necessary side line. Notable among this group were the Reverend James Maury, Rector of Fredericksville Parish 1754 to 1768, a preceptor of Thomas Jefferson, and his son the Reverend Matthew Maury, who followed his father and preached and taught until his death in 1808. Another was the Reverend Frederick W. Hatch, who preached in the Court House and taught school in the little brick building which formerly stood at the east end of Main Street and was known as the William Wirt Law Office.

Prominent among the many able and devoted laymen of the local churches have been the late M. C. Thomas, who started many years ago the First Baptist Young People's Union in the Southern Baptist Convention, and Dr. Halstead S. Hedges, who taught a Bible Class of the First Presbyterian Church here for 50 years. As these notes are written Dr. Hedges is still active in many fields despite his present age of 94. He will also be remembered for his work in developing the first eye, ear, nose and throat clinic at the University of Virginia Hospital.

SOURCES OF CHARLOTTESVILLE'S DOLLARS

and a statue of Homer and the boy who led him in his blindness stands in the center of the Lawn in front of Cabell Hall. The full size marble statue of Thomas Jefferson by Alexander Galt, which was saved when the Rotunda burned, is back in the restored Rotunda.

In the county at Ash Lawn stands a large marble statue of President Monroe. It was made of finest Italian marble by the famous European sculptor, Attilio Piccirilli, and was unveiled in 1931, on the 100th anniversary of Monroe's death.

A distinct cultural asset of Charlottesville has been its Municipal Band. It was formed in August, 1922, largely through the initiative and vision of Sol Kaufman. Harry Lowe became its first director. The members, men and women, all serve without pay, and they give generously of their time for annual public concerts and for band appearances on special occasions. The director receives a salary. The group is governed by a seven man board of directors, who elect a president. Kaufman was president from 1922 to 1933. Then Guy F. Via was president for 15 years, next T. Dallas Bailey for 8 years, then J. C. Laramore, Jr. from 1956 to 1961, and since then John M. Rimel. The present director is Sharon B. Hoose, who is also director of the Lane High School Band.

CHURCHES

The City of Charlottesville has over 40 churches, and the county has two of the older Episcopal parishes in Virginia, Fredericksville Parish and St. Anne's Parish. The first church building in Charlottesville was Christ Episcopal Church on its present site, which was opened in 1826. Jefferson was a vestryman of the Episcopal Church, though for his choice of new Testament passages in his own transcript of parts of the Bible he is generally regarded as a Unitarian. Nearly all the generally recognized Protestant denominations have a church here. There are two Roman Catholic Churches, a student center and a chapel connected with Branchland Parochial school. There is one Hebrew Synagogue and one Greek Orthodox Church, and one Church of the Latter Day Saints.

Many priests and pastors who were famous while here or became famous later have served in the local city and county churches. Some of those who have become Bishops in the Episcopal Church are three from St. Paul's Memorial Church at the University, namely, Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., Southern Ohio; Bishop Noble C. Powell, Maryland; and Bishop Arthur B. Kinsolving, II, Arizona. Also, a Rector of Christ Church, The Rev. W. Roy Mason, became a Bishop Suffragan of Virginia. The Reverend Joseph P. B. Wilmer, who served in early life in St. Anne's Parish, Scottsville, and who later became Bishop of Louisiana, had a significant role to play in General Robert E. Lee's decision to become president of Washington College, now Washington and Lee University. "Parson" Wilmer owned Plain Dealing, near Keene,

There are three large and sound banks, one of them the only new bank in the state, or in the nation, to open its doors in the depression year of 1931. This latter bank is the Citizens Bank and Trust Company. The older and larger banks are Peoples National Bank and National Bank and Trust Company. Both have many branches.

The first source of local dollars was from agriculture, grains and fruits especially. Crozet became the peach capital of the state. Charlottesville in the late 1800's had a cigar factory which used local tobacco and a celebrated winery (Monticello Wine Company) for local grapes. Apples, from the Albemarle Pippin to the wine-sap, were also a large export item. In later years less grain has been grown, fewer fruits are harvested, and most of the money crop of the farmers is beef cattle, although the Monticello Dairy supports quite a few dairy herds. The poultry business has been left largely to neighboring Rockingham County.

Horses, as will be shown below, are a large factor in the farming economy.

The second source of dollars was the large payroll of the educational institutions here, especially, of course, the University. As the University has grown this source has become a higher proportionate part of the local income.

The next source has been the expanding industry of this section. Although industries have been carefully selected, as mentioned earlier in these notes, some fairly large industrial payrolls are now in the county and city, notably the Sperry-Piedmont Company, Morton Frozen Foods, Acme Visible Records, U. S. Instruments Corp., Frank Ix and Sons, and U. S. Rubber Co. Two other organizations also have substantial payrolls, the Regional Office of the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and the Regional Office of the State Farm Mutual Insurance Company. The third source is the oncoming tourist who comes to see the historic shrines and the lovely gardens. This source is being actively developed through the Chamber of Commerce and the Virginia Travel Council and in time it may become the community's best bet for dollars.

Back of all these sources are the deposits and the expenditures of the men of wealth who have been attracted to Charlottesville and Albemarle because it is such a wholesome, healthy, beautiful, and convenient place in which to have one's home.

As of 1962 the estimated order of most incoming dollars is: (1) industry, (2) education, (3) tourists, (4) agriculture.

HORSES

A few special notes on horses is in order, for this community has long been noted for its fine horses. Arthur B. Hancock, the owner of Ellerslie, maintained a breeding establishment for thoroughbred racing stock both at Ellerslie, near Carter's Bridge, and at Lexington, Kentucky. After his death, some ten years or more ago, the Ellerslie stud was discontinued, but by that time Charles A. Stone, of nearby Morven, and after his death his son, Whitney Stone, had begun to breed thoroughbreds very successfully. More recently the Nydris Stud operated near Keene by Daniel G. Van Clief, has also been very prominent in this field. And going back for many, many years the late "Billy" Garth of Ingleside, and his sons and son-in-law, Dr. J. P. Jones, have all been well-known breeders, trainers, and owners of leading horses of the American turf.

Earlier than all the foregoing activity was the introduction of the Clydesdale draft horse into this country by Slaughter W. Ficklin, when he lived at Belmont on the southern outskirts of the town prior to his death in 1886. One of the original importations is said to have been buried in his yard at Belmont.

The thoroughbred, however, has been overshadowed from time to time in Albemarle County by the cross-bred hunter and show horse. This county has usually had at least three recognized hunt clubs, variously, Greenwood, Keswick, Farmington, etc. Moreover, it has been the scene of horse shows and hunter trials for half a century. It is one of the best known fox hunting areas in America. Also, there have usually been three or four riding academies where the youngsters learn to ride. Anyone who knows hunters knows or has heard of the late Julian Morris and Mrs. Allen Potts and of contemporary Ellie Wood Keith, Senior and Junior, Jack Carpenter and Norris Watson, and anyone who still retains a memory of carriage horses knows of Forest Ward. Albemarle County horses have won the highest honors times without number in the eastern circuit horse shows and at Madison Square Garden.

Local residents today are familiar with the Farmington and Keswick horse shows, but only the older ones remember well the annual horse shows of the Albemarle Horse Show Association, held at the Show Grounds near Fry's Spring. These shows were the leading social event of the summer in the years prior to World War I, and blistering was the language of an unnamed lady from Gordonsville when her mount was not given the blue ribbon. The late Captain Joel M. Cochran of the Monticello Guard was the president of the Albemarle Horse Show Association around 1915. The Fry's Spring land became the subject of a housing subdivision and the horse show activity was shifted to the Fair Grounds on Hydraulic Road, near the present U. S. 250 By-Pass, but the show was not the same. The old glory, the old pomp and ceremony were gone, and Keswick became thereafter the leading county show.

Apology must be made for the shortcomings of these notes. Many more illustrious persons should be mentioned, many more important events should be chronicled, many anecdotes should be included; other pictures of persons and places should be shown; and more detailed statements should be made of many persons who are barely mentioned here. All this could not be done within the brief space available in this booklet for historical notes. Readers who miss these names and events in these pages must register their protests, in order that when someone attempts at a later date to develop a worthwhile history of this community such omissions shall be corrected.

ARITA BOWL, JAPANESE, LATE 17TH CENTURY

Made for Prince Nambu whose crest appears nine times in the design. In 1736 William Randolph traded 400 acres of land in Albemarle County to Peter Jefferson for nine gallons of "Henry Weatherbourne's arrack punch" served in this bowl. The tract was later called Shadwell and was the birthplace of Thomas Jefferson.

The bowl belonged to the Harrison family and both President William Henry Harrison and President Benjamin Harrison took it to the Whitehouse where it served as the official bowl.

ALBEMARLE COUNTY COURTHOUSE

This courthouse green was the frequent meeting place of three presidents of the United States—Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and James Monroe. Here all three men campaigned for public office. The courtroom was built in 1803 and the portico was added in the 1860s. In this courthouse, Confederate Ranger John S. Mosby, while a student at the University of Virginia, was convicted of shooting and seriously wounding a fellow student. The original courthouse on this square was a wooden structure built in 1762. It stood near the site of the Confederate statue.

MONTICELLO TRAVEL EXHIBIT

Beverly and Neville Allison, as Martha and Thomas Jefferson, greet Vice Mayor Bernard J. Haggerty and Claude A. Jessup, president of the 200th Anniversary Commission, during a public showing of the Monticello Travel Exhibit on August 10, 1961, at the Monticello Hotel. The exhibit, created by the Anniversary Commission, was displayed in more than a dozen travel shows outside Virginia during 1961 and 1962 to advertise Charlottesville's bicentennial.

The success of our 200th Anniversary has been made possible by the splendid co-operation of the people whose names appear in this Program. Unfortunately, we could not list everyone who took a part in the celebration (we would have to name almost half of the city!) For these omissions and for any misspelled names, we offer our apologies in advance, with the promise that we will make necessary corrections in the 250th Anniversary Edition!

FRONTISPIECE

Upper quarter of the Dan Smith map showing City Lots. Courtesy of Mrs. J. Rawlings Thomson. This map made and signed by "Dan Smith, Asst. Surv.," about 1783, shows existing and proposed roads entering Charlottesville from the east; it is shown here because it shows the 56 original lots of the town.

Bernard P. Chamberlain was the editor who compiled the historical notes and photographs in this souvenir program.

200TH ANNIVERSARY CHARLOTTESVILLE 1762 - 1962

"And our own dear Monticello, where has nature spread so rich a mantle under the eye? Mountains, forests, rocks, rivers. How sublime to look down into the workhouse of nature, to see her clouds, hail, snow, thunder, all fabricated at our feet!"
